A Brief History of the MONTEREY OPEN Championship

The Monterey Open has a rich and storied history dating back to 1926, when it was won by “Light Horse” Harry Cooper in an event that included most of the top golfers in the nation—including the reigning U.S. Amateur George Von Elm, and 1927 Ryder Cup team members “Wild” Bill Melhorn, Joe Turnesa, Johnny Golden, Al Watrous, Johnny Farrell, Leo Diegel, and Al Espinosa.

The tournament missed a few years during the Great Depression, and again during WWII, but otherwise remained a popular annual event on the Del Monte Golf Course calendar. Following the WWII death of a popular Monterey golfer, The Bud Brownell Memorial Trophy was crafted by Jo Mora for engraving the names of future winners.

After a brief hiatus (the tournament was not played from 1997-2003), Del Monte Golf Course resumed the event in 2004.

The 2010 Monterey Open Championship was once again claimed by a first time winner, Erick Justesen. His three rounds of 64-67-68 (-17) were enough to secure a four-stroke victory over the field. There was plenty of reason to believe that Justesen, a former CSU Stanislaus standout and Sacramento native, would have a great tournament after the summer he had. His four top 25 finishes on the Canadian Tour were only eclipsed by his qualification into the 2010 U.S. Open played at Pebble Beach Golf Links. Justesen was able to make the 36-hole cut and play on the weekend finishing 69th and collecting a nice check. He then received an invitation to play in the Frys.com Open at CordeValle Golf Club later that September. Runner-up, Andrew Streatfeild, had his best Monterey Open finish at 13-under, but in the end, Justesen’s play was just too strong.
